

The Hobbit

J R Tolkien

It's about a boy who wanted to go on an adventure but he didn't want to tell anybody that he wanted to go on an adventure. The wizard found out that he wanted to go on an adventure so he told him to meet him for tea the next day. As he gets ready for tea he hears a knock on the door. So he opens the door and unexpectedly 14 dwarfs showed up at his door. He was amazed and they came in and started eating his food. That's when Gandolf decides to come and then buzzed out for the night. The next morning he woke up and found everything a mess. And then that's when I think the wizard came and so he told him that you have to be here at noon.

Now, the stuff that I didn't like was how he just let those dwarfs come in his house and he didn't even know them. See, they could have murdered him. And why would he go on some adventure with people he didn't know. It could've been some trap, even though it wasn't. Why is there a talking dragon in the book? At first he was pretending to sleep and then Bilbo slipped the ring on his finger and was invisible. He didn't disappear disappear but no one could see him. He was invisible. That's what I don't like about the book. Now the stuff that i like in the book. How bilbo save the dwarves when the goblins were coming. When were about to get eatten by the spiders. Then when the king lock the dwarves in the jail. So the book was very good but there were some parts that i did not like in the book.
