

Smith: The European Code Messenger

By Chigorizim

Chapter 1 Introduction

There was once a young boy born June 5, 1737. The now nine-year-old was named Smith Johnson. He lived on the streets of Wales, England. No father or mother was with him because of the King George's War. His father, James worked as a butcher. His mother Sarah was a full-time housewife. His parents died because France sent a super nova bomb. He manages to survive by using his talent which is reading codes. People would write an ancient code and he would solve it in at least one to two minutes. If people were impressed, they would give him some money. Some days he would buy bread and other times people might give him food. He once was given a Greek code and the person was impressed and gave him four dollars. He bought bread.

Chapter 2 The Voyage

Smith has typical days like trying to get money for food to eat. This day wasn't like Smith's typical days. He decided to explore his state. So, he decided to venture off on his journey. He had no transportation, so he tried to bribe people. He had a friend named Jones Brown that was a sailor. He asked him for help. Jones tried to help by buying a ship. Jones the sailor asked, "Can I join your voyage?" Smith replied, "Yes!" Jones got the ship ready to sail. So, they started to sail London. Once they reached their destination Jones bought them a hotel. Once Smith entered, he was surprised he did not know what to say or do. Smith had never seen anything like it. He had a proper bed to sleep on instead of old rags. He was able to eat a proper meal every other child ate. He could not thank Jones enough of what he was given. Three years later Smith decided to live in London and lived until twelve. The Second Carnatic War came and that was trouble.

Chapter 3 The Code for the Win

The first Carnatic War came in and Smith was caught in the middle of the war. It was fortunate that he was on the base of the British, so he was safe from harm. Smith lived with the soldiers for two years and he mostly heard General Jenkins say, "We are failing. We need to keep our battle plan more sacred." Smith could guess France knew their weapons and formation. Four months passed, and the general said, "We need a new way to communicate." Smith taught them the concept, to place a letter and place a number so they can move up that number and get the true letter.

Chapter 4 The Banquet

Three years past and the British was victorious so far thanks to their new communication. Two months later the French gave in and the British won the war. To honor the dedication of the help Smith gave to the general and soldiers they named the code Smithson. The queen gave a vast banquet to remember the victory of their country. Everyone was invited whether poor or rich and they all came to the banquet wearing their nicest gowns. Smith had a ticket for a VIP area because he was a special young boy. To honor Smith, they carved a statue of Smith in remembrance of him. Years and years to come people still remember him to this day.
