

The Potato Mission By Javier

In universe billions of miles away lived a green alien who lost his magical flying potato. He loved his potato very much, but that very potato was the key to destruction. John had his very own planet to himself, but the planet had cost him so much money that he couldn't buy a space ship. The potato must have gone to a planet super far away. So, John set off to find his potato, but first he needed to find the parts to a rocket and blueprints. John found some rusty old mechanical parts from a rocket. So, he kept searching on his sandy rocky planet, and he found a rocket in the sand. Amazingly, the rocket worked.

He packed up his bags and set off to find the potato. John saw millions of other stars and planets. He also spotted a completely dark and dead planet with one little teeny light, so he scooted in closer and saw a big evil tomato with red arms and legs with its stem as a crown. He squinted and saw the tomato shouting tomatoes and John heard one word that was potato. John knew what potato he was after and that was the magical flying potato. John had to find his friend. John looked on one planet called Potato Plunge and he saw a giant water park that had millions of potatoes on it, but John spotted a potato that was growing purple and with humongous angel wings. So, he went down to Potato Plunge and saw his potato on the highest water slide in the whole entire park! He had to snatch him before the big tomato found him. John hurried down to the entrance and he checked into a hotel in the resort and saw his potato in a line to a slide. John sprinted over to him. John's hands felt very slimy and slippery. "Oh no!" shouted the potato. "What?" replied John. They both saw a giant tomato smashed down on the planet. "Let's get out of here!" said John.

John and his potato had to get out of there before the kind tomato found them. So, John and his magical potato ran to the spaceship before King Tomato found and slaughtered John. John and the potato boarded the ship and pushed buttons and pulled levers until they got into the air. John saw that the giant tomato was going to get them. John clicked a button that said emergency teleport and teleported the whole ship back to his planet. John opened the door to his house and went to sleep. Our heroes might have escaped but King Tomato still lives on.

The End.