

Minnesota Vikings

Finn M.

Ever since Finn was 5 years old, he more than anything wanted to be in the NFL. In middle school, Finn was a star athlete, same with his best friend, Ford. They stayed with each other throughout High School, but once college came, they have made up their minds, Ford was going to A&M, and Finn was so good, that he got a scholarship to OSU. Each stayed four years in college. And in the 2004 NFL Draft, Finn was Drafted to the Minnesota Vikings, as a 2nd round pick. Ford was also Drafted to the Minnesota Vikings, but he was a first round pick. They were like fire, burning all the teams so bad, like a piece of paper, shredding in half, in a matter of seconds. Then, in a matter of weeks, they were in the biggest football game of their lives, they were going against the Carolina Panthers, they were under so much pressure that on the last play of the game, the star kicker, Ryan James, missed the field goal. Later that year before the next season, both Ford and Finn were practicing drills, when Joey Nash smashed Ford to the ground, he had broke his back, they all knew he was going to be out for the season, then the next day Brandon Collins hit Finn from behind, he was also out for the season with a broken back. In Grey Sloan Memorial Hospital they were placed together to watch their team dominate. Their back up Quarterback, Ray Barone, was the best around, he could run, jump, and he could throw. They were going to the superbowl, against the New York Giants. At halftime they were up 21-7, then in a split second they won. It was over, they were champions. In the hospital Finn and Ford were ecstatic, they basically won, but they would never play again. But that didn't bum their spirits, they were both inducted into the Hall of Fame in 2006, Finn as a Wide Receiver, and Ford as a Quarterback. Today they still visit each other, in their wheelchairs, Happy as can be. The End.
