Dear Diary, today was a regular day like any other, but something else happened. Christine decided to bring her new phone to school, everyone swarmed around her to admire it. Her phone was pink with a golden case with pink glitter inside it. Sabrina said that she was going to get the same phone today afterschool. Then Christine came up to me. "Where is your phone Diana?" she asked. "In my locker." I responded. "Let me see it." she demanded. So I took it out of my locker, everyone started laughing at me. "OMG! You have that phone?" she asked mockingly. I didn't respond, I looked down at my phone and luckily the bell saved me. My friends Mayah and Sydney came up to me during PE. They asked me why everyone had laughed at me. I told them the whole story. "OMG, Christy has the new phone?!" Sydney said shockingly. "Yeah." I responded. The rest of the day Sydney was just hanging out with Christine, I was just with Mayah.

Hi Diary turns out the phone heads aren't dangerous they're just walking around texting, watching videos or playing games. I had a plan to lure the phone heads to the hospital. I made a HUGE poster that said "FREE WIFI!!!". I ran outside of the hospital and waved the poster and yelled "FREE WIFI!". A few phone heads looked up and texted others to come to the hospital. In a couple minutes packs of phone heads came stampeding towards me. I had put cones where the free Wi-Fi was, they all clumped up inside the cones and waited to get signal. Meanwhile I brought out sport equipment and books. I handed each of the phone heads one object. One by one they started turning back to normal, but the some of them immediately got on there phone's and turned back into phone heads. Finally everyone turned back to normal and the whole town learned a lesson: "there are so many things in our lives worth discovering, you cannot just waste your time on an expensive piece of metal, you need to expose yourself to knowledge, nature and the people around you."
