

The Four Brothers Find Home

By Evie C.

At the animal shelter four tiny Siamese brothers woke up in their shared box. The smallest one, Scout, stretched his little paws. “Good morning brothers!” he chirped. “I’m so excited! Maybe today we’ll find our forever family!” The second brother, Mittens, flicked his tail nervously. “But what if nobody wants all four of us together?” he worried hearing dogs bark in the distance. The third brother, Patch, stood up boldly “Don’t worry-“ he suddenly heard footsteps in the area. A kind shelter worker walked through the door, “Look who’s here to meet you’ little ones!” She said gently. Behind her was a family with two children and their parents. The little girl gasped with delight. The father smiled warmly. “They’re beautiful but four kittens is a lot of responsibility.” The brothers’ hearts sank a little. Maybe they would have to be separated after all. But then the boy of the family spoke up. “Dad, look how the big one is helping the small one.” The fourth brother, Whiskers, was wrapping his tail around Scout, keeping him warm. The shelter worker smiled knowingly. “These four have been together since birth.” Soon they were riding home in a small carrier, still together. In their new home they discovered four beds and toys everywhere. They soon purred themselves to sleep knowing they would wake up in their forever home still together.
