Always Try and Try Again

Jake loves baseball. He wants to be a baseball player but he cannot hit the ball because he has a broken arm. Jake sees the sun go down and sees a cold drizzle on his face. He goes outside to practice and only uses his good arm to catch the ball with his dad's help. Jake tires to hit the ball with the bat. His dad shouted that is dangerous! Jake yelled "why not? I can bat with one arm!" His dad said "ok, hit it softly but Jake missed the ball and kept practicing all evening. Then he went inside he asked him mom if he could play on the baseball team. She said "yes." They went the next day. When he got there they said, your team name is the Red Sock team and you have a game tomorrow. The next day, the sun was shining bright like a star. Jake was late but he got ready. When he got there, it was his turn Jake missed two balls! On the last hit, he hit the ball over the other team and made a run for it to 1st base. The next player on his team hit a homerun! Jake ran with his broken arm all the way to the home base. They won the game! Jake was excited. Jake thought it does not matter if you have a broken arm, because you can still play a sport as long as you try you might still win the game! It surely was a team effort.
