

The crazy electronics

Have you ever had something crazy happen at school? Well I have. This is the story of the crazy school electronics.

It started off as a normal school day. We just got out of lunch. The only weird thing was the computers were acting up. That day we were having presentations about some rules about library books. Most people thought it was boring and were kind of happy that they had free time. We ended up leaving to get ready for our next class. On our way to our next class, the electricity went out (lights, automatic doors, etc.). We didn't think anything of it so we continued with our day.

Finally, it was the end of the day. We were in math class learning long division. The lights switched back on about 30 minutes ago. I was taking notes when we heard 6 loud "BANGS!" We all turned our heads to the windows. There were bars surrounding the windows. We all looked at each other and heard more bangs. We all rushed out of the classroom to see what was going on. All of the other classroom's windows had bars. Then we all heard a voice from our classroom. "Hello humans!" the voice said. "Who are you?" I asked. "I'm your computer," the voice said. "And I'm taking over the world!" the voice said. I thought to myself "How can I stop this?" We were all super worried and scared. They decided to hide while I stayed in the classroom. I thought and thought and I finally got it. I walked over to the computer and unplugged the wire. It worked!

! THE END!
