

The Treeless Road

By Sabil H

Cleo got out of his car and looked around. Cleo's family had moved from a quiet street in Canada. Cleo's dad had taken a great job at a factory nearby. He said we all would have a better life here.

But there was something different about this street. In Canada, there were green everywhere. Grass grew all over and there were trees everywhere. However, their new home was covered in grey. All Cleo saw was buildings and concrete. Cleo also notice Cleo's mom showed them the apartment building they would be staying in. Their room was clean and tidy. It seemed as if it was untouched by anybody at all.

Cleo went straight to his bed. He thought about the dirty street they lived on. He remembered climbing up the trees in his backyard and playing in the soft, green grass back in Canada. But there was not a single tree neither a blade of grass.

The next day was dad's first day of work here. Cleo went outside to kill some time. He walked for a while until he came to a park. The park had a ton of grass, which greatly pleased Cleo. He walked on the path through the park. He saw people walking their dogs, playing tag, and feeding birds. Cleo walked around a lake that was surrounded by people who were fishing. Somebody caught a big fish as Cleo walked by.

The park soon became Cleo's favorite place to visit. He went there almost every day, even if it was raining outside. One day, when Cleo was about to finish walking on the trail, the greatest idea ever popped up in his mind. He went to his mother and told her about what he wanted to do.

Next day, when dad went to work, Cleo and his mother went on a long drive to a nursery. They bought few saplings and took them back to the apartment. Mom said they had to get permission before they could plant them. Finally, they planted the saplings across the park. Now all they had to do was wait for them to grow into the most magnificent trees the citizen has ever seen.

Cleo and his family lived there for another year until the time finally came. Cleo visited the park and was surprised to the sight of the park covered in cedar trees.

Everybody loved the park. The park became crowded every day. People sat and had picnics under the trees. People decided that there could not only be trees in the park, but in the whole area, too. So, everybody planted saplings, grew grass, and cleaned all the trash they saw. And the street went from being a grey and boring street to bursting with life.

Cleo loved the street he lived on more than ever now. He had lots of friends, his dad was successful at his job, and best of all, there was nature all around Cleo. It turned out Cleo did have a better life here, just like his dad had said.

The End

This is a tale of _____.

Who wanted more than anything to _____.

But he can't because _____.

He solves this by _____.