Rinngg! School was finally over! Katherine couldn't wait to drink some warm hot cocoa with whipped cream on top. As she walked home she saw that all the trees were covered in sparkling snow. Suddenly, she heard a low growl coming from the forest on her right. On her left, she saw her dad, peeking through the window waiting for her to come home. Katherine now had to decide which way to go. Will it be her dad, that she's going to see after one year, or will she save the mysterious animal that seemed hurt.

Katherine really loved animals, but what if her dad left her by the time she came back? She took a deep breath...and went into the icy forest. As she walked through the forest the growl became louder. When she found a clearing, she was surprised to find a cute husky laying on its side with a thorn stuck in its paw. She got closer and closer. She carefully plucked out the thorn even though it took some tugging. After the husky got on its paws, it came up to Katherine and licked her face. Katherine could tell that the husky was very thankful.

Katherine couldn't help but take the husky with her. As she walked home with the husky in her hands, she thought about ways to convince her parents to keep the adorable husky. After she got home, she saw the surprised looks on her parents' faces. Katherine decided to explain before her parents burst with anger. Katherine wanted to start off with how she heard the low growl and followed it into the forest. While she was explaining, the shock on her parent's faces was still there so she tried to convince them using multiple ways. "If you let me keep the husky it can pull the dog sled I got for my birthday" Katherine said. "I don't know about that" said dad. "We'll talk about it and let you know before your bedtime" said mom.

Katherine brushed her teeth and got ready for bed. She pet the husky until it was sound asleep. She could hardly wait for her parents to give her the answer that she's been waiting for the last few hours. Her parents finally came in her room to tell her their decision. "We talked about it and we made our minds" Dad said. "You can keep the husky on one condition, you must take care of all its needs without my help" said mom. "I'll do anything for...SILVERSTONE.
