Swish, there goes another basket!

John's dream is to be in the NBA. Dripping sweat...raining from every bone in his body.

People always doubted him for how small he really was.

His dad always told him that even though he might've been the smallest one on the court all the time, he had the biggest heart.

Being the smallest person on the court gave him a disadvantage. Although John was small, he never acted like someone he wasn't. He was true to himself and that's what made him unique.

John's dad passed away when he was ten. It was a huge setback in his life, but he knew that he had to just move on. This always kept him motivated throughout his life, and he really never wanted to talk about it, even though it was burned in his head.

John's life was always complicated but if you weren't around him, it didn't seem as if it was. With his mom by his side, John was always determined to succeed and fulfill his dreams.

John is also very creative. He understands that the world just has too much negativity for him to be mean and put people down. He shows great compassion for his peers and even more for those he loves. John had to learn to carry himself not just on the court, but off the court. Everyone looked up to him as a role model because he knew how to keep balance in life.

In conclusion, John is just the person we need in this society. He is a hardworking, mature, smart and last but certainly not least, and amazing basketball player.
